Dear Shoes:

- If you are a pair of sneakers, what have you done that is sneaky?

Of course I've never done anything sneaky. I am an extremely hard-working pair of old boots which have carried my owner all over Edinburgh in search of good cafés to write in. I have occasionally annoyed her by being tricky to do up, but that's her problem.

- What other famous shoes do you know?

I am disgusted to say that she has never worn me to meet other famous shoes. Her lame excuse is that I am too worn and shabby - and after all I've done for her! I happen to know that her black sandals have met Kirk Douglas's shoes, Donny Osmond's shoes and Rosie O'Donnell's shoes. Naturally, I don't talk to them any more.

- Tell me about the best or worst event that your owner has worn you to.

My owner was wearing me when she wrote several chapters of "Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone", and I liked that, because it gave me a rest. She also wore me when she was a teacher, and one boy made fun of me, which I didn't appreciate. He said I was "kinky!"

- From this century, what pair of shoes would you trade places with and explain why.

I would like to have carried Jessica Mitford around for a while. She was a writer and human-rights activist who lived in Oakland, California, and she was my (and my owner's) heroine.

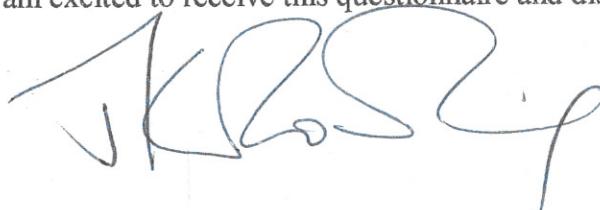

- If you could give yourself as a present to someone or something, who or what would it be?

I would give myself to anyone who appreciates stout footwear which will brave the wet and cold Scottish winters.

- To "fill you", as well as your owner has, what character traits would I need to possess?

Hum... you will need to like walking, and then sitting down for long periods and concentrating hard. You will be determined but also disorganised (a lot of my exercise has come from running back to fetch things my owner has forgotten).
